A touch of modernity

"It lies in human nature that where you experience your first laughs, you also remember the age kindly."
- Vaclav Havel

At Charles University, studying at the Faculty of Humanities is a life-changing experience. As you continue your education here, you will learn from outstanding academics and meet international and local students alike. There is no a better way to shape your adulthood.

Often, this feeling will be accommodated by making it a better place for both students and academics. You as young participants in the modern world will come up with tons of ideas on how to modernize the Faculty. That's exactly what I'm looking for from you!

Listening to your ideas, your perspectives, and the challenges you face here is important to me. I want to help you realize those ideas and build the right rationale behind them so they can be taken into consideration sooner rather than later.

I want to know what long-term and short-term challenges your ideas are solving.

I'm in my 2nd year of the PhD programme General Anthropology, specializing in Historical Anthropology. I completed my Master's at the Department of Oral History.

At the end of the day...

The final words to get you through the vote

How do we better connect our everyday live with the life of a student? We sometimes feel overwhelmed with life when those two are so isolated. An environment that is culturally inclusive eases this challenge.

It's the kind of environment where are free to express our opinions about different student and life matters based on our own unique attributes. It's the kind of environment in which students and academics learn from one another.

While this may sound like a pleasant study environment, it is also extremely difficult to achieve since it involves too many different opinions at once. What can we do about it?

At the end of the day, it's not about saying, it's about listening first. My goal is to listen to your words and address the challenges that the Faculty can actually resolve.

To address the right challenges at the right time, we need to understand the possibilities within the Faculty's scope. We can say, "We need a mobile-friendly SIS." - and we really do! But can this be resolved at the Faculty level?

What are the challenges we can resolve today within the Faculty's scope? Those are the ones we must identify and start solving today to be able to address the other ones in the future.
