Feminist reading group

A Feminist Reading Group has been formed at the Faculty at the beginning of the winter semester 2024 (i.e., October). It is being organized by Dr. Denisa Tomkova from the Department of Theory of Art and Artworks. Texts and discussions are in English. If you want to join the group, please contact dr. Tomková.

International student group FHS UK

This student group would like to bring people together in FHS. While mainly composed of students from the Liberal Arts and Humanities program, it looks to create a community for all English speakers. For now we are working on creating a study space and regular meet ups at pubs or outside during the summer. Everyone that is looking for an English-speaking environment is welcome.

ASambláž

ASambláž was originally founded as part of the Anthropological Studies Master's study programme at the Faculty of Humanities, Charles University. It brings together those interested in anthropology and other related disciplines, regardless of institutional anchorage, and aims to create a friendly platform for sharing experiences, both academic and personal, and meeting students across years, faculties, and disciplines.

Humanitní revue – Humr

A student magazine that provides a creative outlet for all students and teachers.

Humr has existed under Studenti FHS UK since 2009 (until 2019), and after a four-year hiatus, it was revived in November 2023 on the occasion of the 30th anniversary of the Bachelor's study program Studium humanitní vzdělanosti. The new version is both in print and online on its website, where you can find the so-called "flipping version". The plan is to publish two issues per semester to keep the magazine running sustainably.

We welcome all creative souls and writing enthusiasts to our editorial team. It is not necessary that everyone contributes regularly and for a long time. We provide anonymity when required and are open to a variety of literary forms. We share experiences and learn new things from each other. We are an open-minded group that tries not to stick strictly to the themes set by the period, and that seeks to bring back the desire to write and create things that make us happy.

Do you want to try an interview, reflection essay or report but don't know how to do it? – We will provide you with ample help and a comfortable environment. Do you feel like you're just doing everything out of necessity for school anymore, and maybe you don't even feel the same passion as you did before you started studying? Join us and find your fire again. Whether you're interested in being part of our community or want to try to pull something out of your drawer once in a while, don't be afraid to contact us!

Society for Cognitive Science

The Society for Cognitive Science aims to popularize the scientific study of the mind and to connect university students and the general public with leading figures in research and practice. We offer regular lectures that are linked to student internship opportunities, and we also seek to popularize the latest discoveries in the field on social media. By disseminating scientific findings to as many people as possible, including students, researchers and the general public, and by creating a platform for networking between students, professionals and other organisations, we hope to help improve understanding of the mind and mental health.

Udr/žitelná FHS

The //udr/žitelná FHS// platform was created in 2024 to connect students, teachers and other people at the Faculty who share a similar interest – an effort to make the Faculty both more sustainable and more “livable”. In addition to environmental issues that affect the daily running of the faculty, our goal is also to participate in making the school and its immediate surroundings a more pleasant place to spend time outside of the classroom.

As student representatives, we are focusing more on sustainability in the daily living of the Faculty and on passing on student suggestions to the Faculty management. Let's work together to create a stable student community that is not indifferent to the Faculty and the topic of sustainability. We welcome new members from all fields of study!

Beekeeping association Pučmeloud FHS UK

In the acacia grove (we call it “jungle”), in front of the Faculty building, we keep bees in warré hives, which is a more nature-friendly and sustainable direction of modern beekeeping. Our primary goal is not to overproduce honey and bee products but to build a good human and non-human community. We hold lectures, organize workshops and try to look at beekeeping from different perspectives. Our society is open to all students not only from the Faculty of Humanities but also from the adjacent dorms. Come and learn about urban beekeeping in times of global climate disruption! We are also building a permaculture garden, Hofmanka, which will not only add flower and vegetable beds to the bee hives but will also provide a rest after busy lectures.
